About FLYING DUST FIRST NATION

The Flying Dust First Nation (FDFN) is located on the northeast side of the City of Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan. The area is home to some of the most fertile farmland in northern Saskatchewan. The Flying Dust First Nation is one of nine First Nations that comprise the Meadow Lake Tribal Council (MLTC). The Flying Dust First Nation people are descendants of the Algonquian linguistic group with Cree as their native language. Being located close to Meadow Lake provides a number of employment opportunities that may not be available to others in more northern areas of the province. The location also provides opportunities for investment and economic opportunities. (Source: flyingdust.net/about)

HIGHLIGHTS AND OPPORTUNITIES

- Flying Dust First Nation (Kopahawakenum) is a member of Treaty 6 and became a signatory on August 26, 1876.
- Flying Dust First Nation is located approximately 300 km northwest of Saskatoon. It is accessible via Highway 55, a vital access route for northern Saskatchewan communities.
- In June 2013, citizens overwhelmingly supported a deal that would see the Nation establish its own law-making powers over its reserve lands, resources and the environment through the First Nation Land Management Act (FNLMA).
- Flying Dust is comprised of seven land parcels that cover more than 20 thousand acres in the heart of some of the most fertile prairie farmland.
- Under the current Treaty Land Entitlement (TLE) structure, the band is entitled to purchase an additional 7469.197 hectares (18, 441.56 acres) of land.
- FDFN has purchased 110 acres of land south of Saskatoon near Highway #11.
- Flying Dust partnered with Meadow Lake Tribal Council and miEnergy in 2022 to prioritize renewable energy.
