

Vision for Reconciliation

We have developed a draft vision of reconciliation—of what success in a generation will look like—but we want to hear from you.

What does reconciliation mean to you?

Where will you start?

Tell us what you think of this vision at www.otc.ca. If we can build consensus on where we are going, we can each do our part to make sure we get there.

Reconciliation in Saskatchewan is each citizen of the province taking personal responsibility to do what they can to create an interdependent and fair society where:

- Indigenous cultures, languages, ways of knowing and governance structures are strong and sovereign, while also included in and contributing to the overall fabric of Saskatchewan life;
 - We share a common understanding of Saskatchewan's history, and our personal place within it;
 - Justice for past wrongs has been achieved, and families and communities are strong and healing;
 - Safe spaces exist and skills are developed for mutual learning, communication across cultures, trust building, partnerships, and shared social experiences;
 - We all enjoy a high quality of life, and full participation in the economy;
 - Governance at all levels, including institutions of education, health, justice, economy and social services, represent and benefit from both Indigenous and non-Indigenous leadership, values, history and ways of knowing.
